I own two guns. One .22 Ruger, and a 12 gauge shotty.

I am vehemently against them ever being used other than target practise. My short stretch in the Marines made me a pacifist.

I never "saw" action, but the mind controll videos they show you did include footage of people dying, which struck home to me.

I realized at that point that everybody I would be killing was someone else's brother, uncle, father, mother, etc.

I could not see how violence was going to solve anything. I saw it as more detrimental in the long run, and was extremely opposed to fighting after that.

I am not really 'into' guns and I would never own one. I have to admit, some of them are pretty neat, and I can see why people would like shooting them at a range or something.

Obviously, legitimate gun owners are not the problem with gun ownership.

One of my biggest problems is that so many gun owners oppose limiting private sales. I think that, although this would inconvenience some gun enthusiasts a bit, that this measure would make guns easier to keep track of. I know it wouldn't solve all problems, but I believe it would solve some.
